A peat-smoked malt whiskey from Ireland's Cooley distillery, similar to many smoky Scotch whiskies. The difference to me is that I don't get as much of the seaweed and coastal notes often found in the Scotch whiskies. Still, there is plenty going on in this whisky, including a lovely creamy vanilla and honeyed malt underbelly to tame the smoke. It reveals more of itself with the addition of water. If there were peat-smoked Lowland Scotch whiskies, they might taste like this.
