

Elements of Islay Bw1
(distilled at Bowmore)

52.9%

Though the color suggests good cask activity, the initial approach shows a dram that seems slightly unfocused and youthful. There are some kernel-like cereal elements and very little smokiness, with touches of salt and oil. The feeling is that it's only starting to blossom — and there is a floral element — and has been bottled too early. It's all very focused, lifted, and aromatic, but when compared to the Adelphi you can't help but wonder whether the same distillery is involved.

—Vol. 22, #1

