

Glenrothes 2001
(bottled 2012)

43%

A typical Rothes nose, with vanilla, granola, apple, Brazil nut, lemon, and low-level sweet spices mixing with lightly oxidized fruits. That said, it needs water, especially for the palate, where the malty crispness of the undiluted taste is replaced by something more considered, darkly fruity and gently spicy; coriander is uppermost. All in all, this is Rothes in very approachable rather than dynamic guise. One for a lazy afternoon.

—Vol. 22, #3

