

Kilchoman Coull Point

46%

This strikes me as being the most overtly smoky of Kilchoman's recent bottlings, and also the sweetest. Intense and very forward, there's baked apple, humid notes, honeydew melon, fresh shellfish. Water brings out a putty-like youthfulness, so take it neat. The palate is amazingly sweet (think golden syrup), then the smoke folds itself over. A good—and well-priced—introduction for newcomers.
