

Jim Beam Rye
40%

For rye whiskey drinkers, Jim Beam isn't the name you're usually looking for, but there's a distinct rye nose: menthol, dill, distinct rye nose: mentnoi, alli, herbs, and boiling oats. The palate is dull, lacking the up-front spice typically found in ryes, and only shows hints of vanilla, caramel, and eventually cinnamon. The extremely short finish leaves me wondering if it would fare better at a higher proof a higher proof.
